Final Decisions on carry-over screening issues:

Skateboards by Eric Meyers: Art on skateboards is done by various artists not affiliated with the Saturday Market.

Arguments:

Pros: Board is primary, art is secondary. People will buy for quality of board, not art work. The real art is the board, which takes a lot of work and skill. A lot of work goes into making the board strong. The layers of wood, pressure, cuts, double concave curves are an enormous amount. People do not buy a skateboard to hang on the wall as art. We should honor his labor and grant an exception to sell other's artwork on his board. Intra-market transaction requires a minimum of two artists, have his artists become members. There is no attendance requirement for members. An active member is someone who has paid their dues. Have them hang out in his booth occasionally.

Cons: He stated "I sell their art". Why does he need the artwork if his boards are so good? What if he started putting the work of famous artists on his boards? He could sell plain boards. The maker is the seller; the art is not being sold by the artist. Which is the dominant piece? It is subjective.

Motion to make an exception under intra-market transaction rules. Colleen/Teresa 6/1/1
